

International Equity ADR Intra-Quarter Commentary—April 2025

International equities posted positive results in April despite renewed trade tensions, uneven economic data, and geopolitical disruptions. Investor sentiment was weighed down by escalating tariff threats from the U.S., weakening economic indicators in key export-driven economies, and heightened political uncertainty across several regions.

In Japan, inflation surprised to the upside in April, with core consumer prices in Tokyo rising 3.4% year over year and exceeding both March's 2.4% increase and consensus estimates. The acceleration was driven by widespread price hikes across goods and services. Despite the inflation uptick, the Bank of Japan is expected to keep rates steady in the near term as policymakers weigh broader economic conditions and await developments in U.S.-Japan trade talks.

Consumer confidence in the U.K. deteriorated in April, falling to its lowest level of the year as concerns over trade tariffs and inflation weighed on sentiment. Consumers are especially pessimistic about the economic outlook amid looming U.S. tariffs on British exports. Further, rising household expenses continue to pressure sentiment, raising questions about the Bank of England's policy flexibility in the face of inflationary risks.

China signaled a proactive policy stance in April, but leadership held off on unleashing large-scale stimulus as they look for an opening to de-escalate the trade war. At the same time, China quietly exempted certain critical U.S. imports such as semiconductors and medical supplies from retaliatory tariffs, reflecting the country's dependence on key American inputs. This selective relief underscores the balancing act facing Chinese policymakers as they navigate an increasingly fraught trade environment while maintaining economic stability.

Our portfolio performance was positive on an absolute basis but trailed our benchmark. Strong selection in Communication Services and Materials offset weak selection in Consumer Discretionary and Health Care. As was the case with the benchmark, our portfolio's emerging markets holdings underperformed its developed markets holdings. Western Europe contributed the most to performance, as our United Kingdom holdings continued to perform well, extending this year's rally. The Asia/Pacific region detracted the most from returns due to negative performance from our Chinese holdings.

Our best performing stock during the month was Marex Group (United Kingdom). The firm performed well during the month as it continues to capitalize on banks retreating from the clearing business, strengthening the company's market position. Further, its ongoing success in product expansion has also supported growth by attracting new clients and increasing wallet share from its existing customers.

Our worst performing stock was FinVolution Group (China). Shares of the online consumer lender were under pressure during the month due to concerns over U.S. and Chinese trade relations. Although we remain confident in FinVolution's growth prospects, we exited the position due to the potential delisting of the company's U.S.-listed ADR, which carries the risk of a total loss of capital due to the company's lack of a Hong Kong listing.

International Equity ADR Intra-Quarter Commentary—April 2025

Global trade dynamics remained volatile as businesses rushed to front-load shipments ahead of new U.S. tariffs. The scramble distorted trade flows and economic data worldwide, lifting first-quarter exports and GDP in regions such as the eurozone and Taiwan but raising concerns of a potential slowdown once the temporary boost fades. With tariff deadlines looming and uncertainty persisting, international markets may continue to see elevated volatility in the months ahead.
